

"I Love you." - A letter to myself

I wish I could say this to you face to face because so much is lost through this means of communication but I hope you can know my heart and see that I'm saying this without malice.

I love you. Be mindful of yourself, GOD doesn't need you. Don't imagine any of your works to be great. They're but meager things. You aren't special or chosen amongst creation for any destiny you imagine, but we are all chosen by GOD to carry forth His Will.

I don't need your approval, I don't care for your favor, I heed nothing from you except what I want. Neither do I desire for you any ill, or reject you or rob you of any dignity.

But I will always be critical of you, watchful over you, and mindful of myself and the barriers I have erected in myself.

May GOD enoble you and fill you with perfect Light and guide you to all Truth ~

~ post script

I hope and pray you have found time to be productive towards your book. I hope you haven't neglected anything more important, like paying attention to your family and telling them they are special to you and loved by you.

And at times I've found great benefit in your words and love amongst those who say they also love you.
